DESCRIPTION/INTEGRITY/ELIGIBILITY

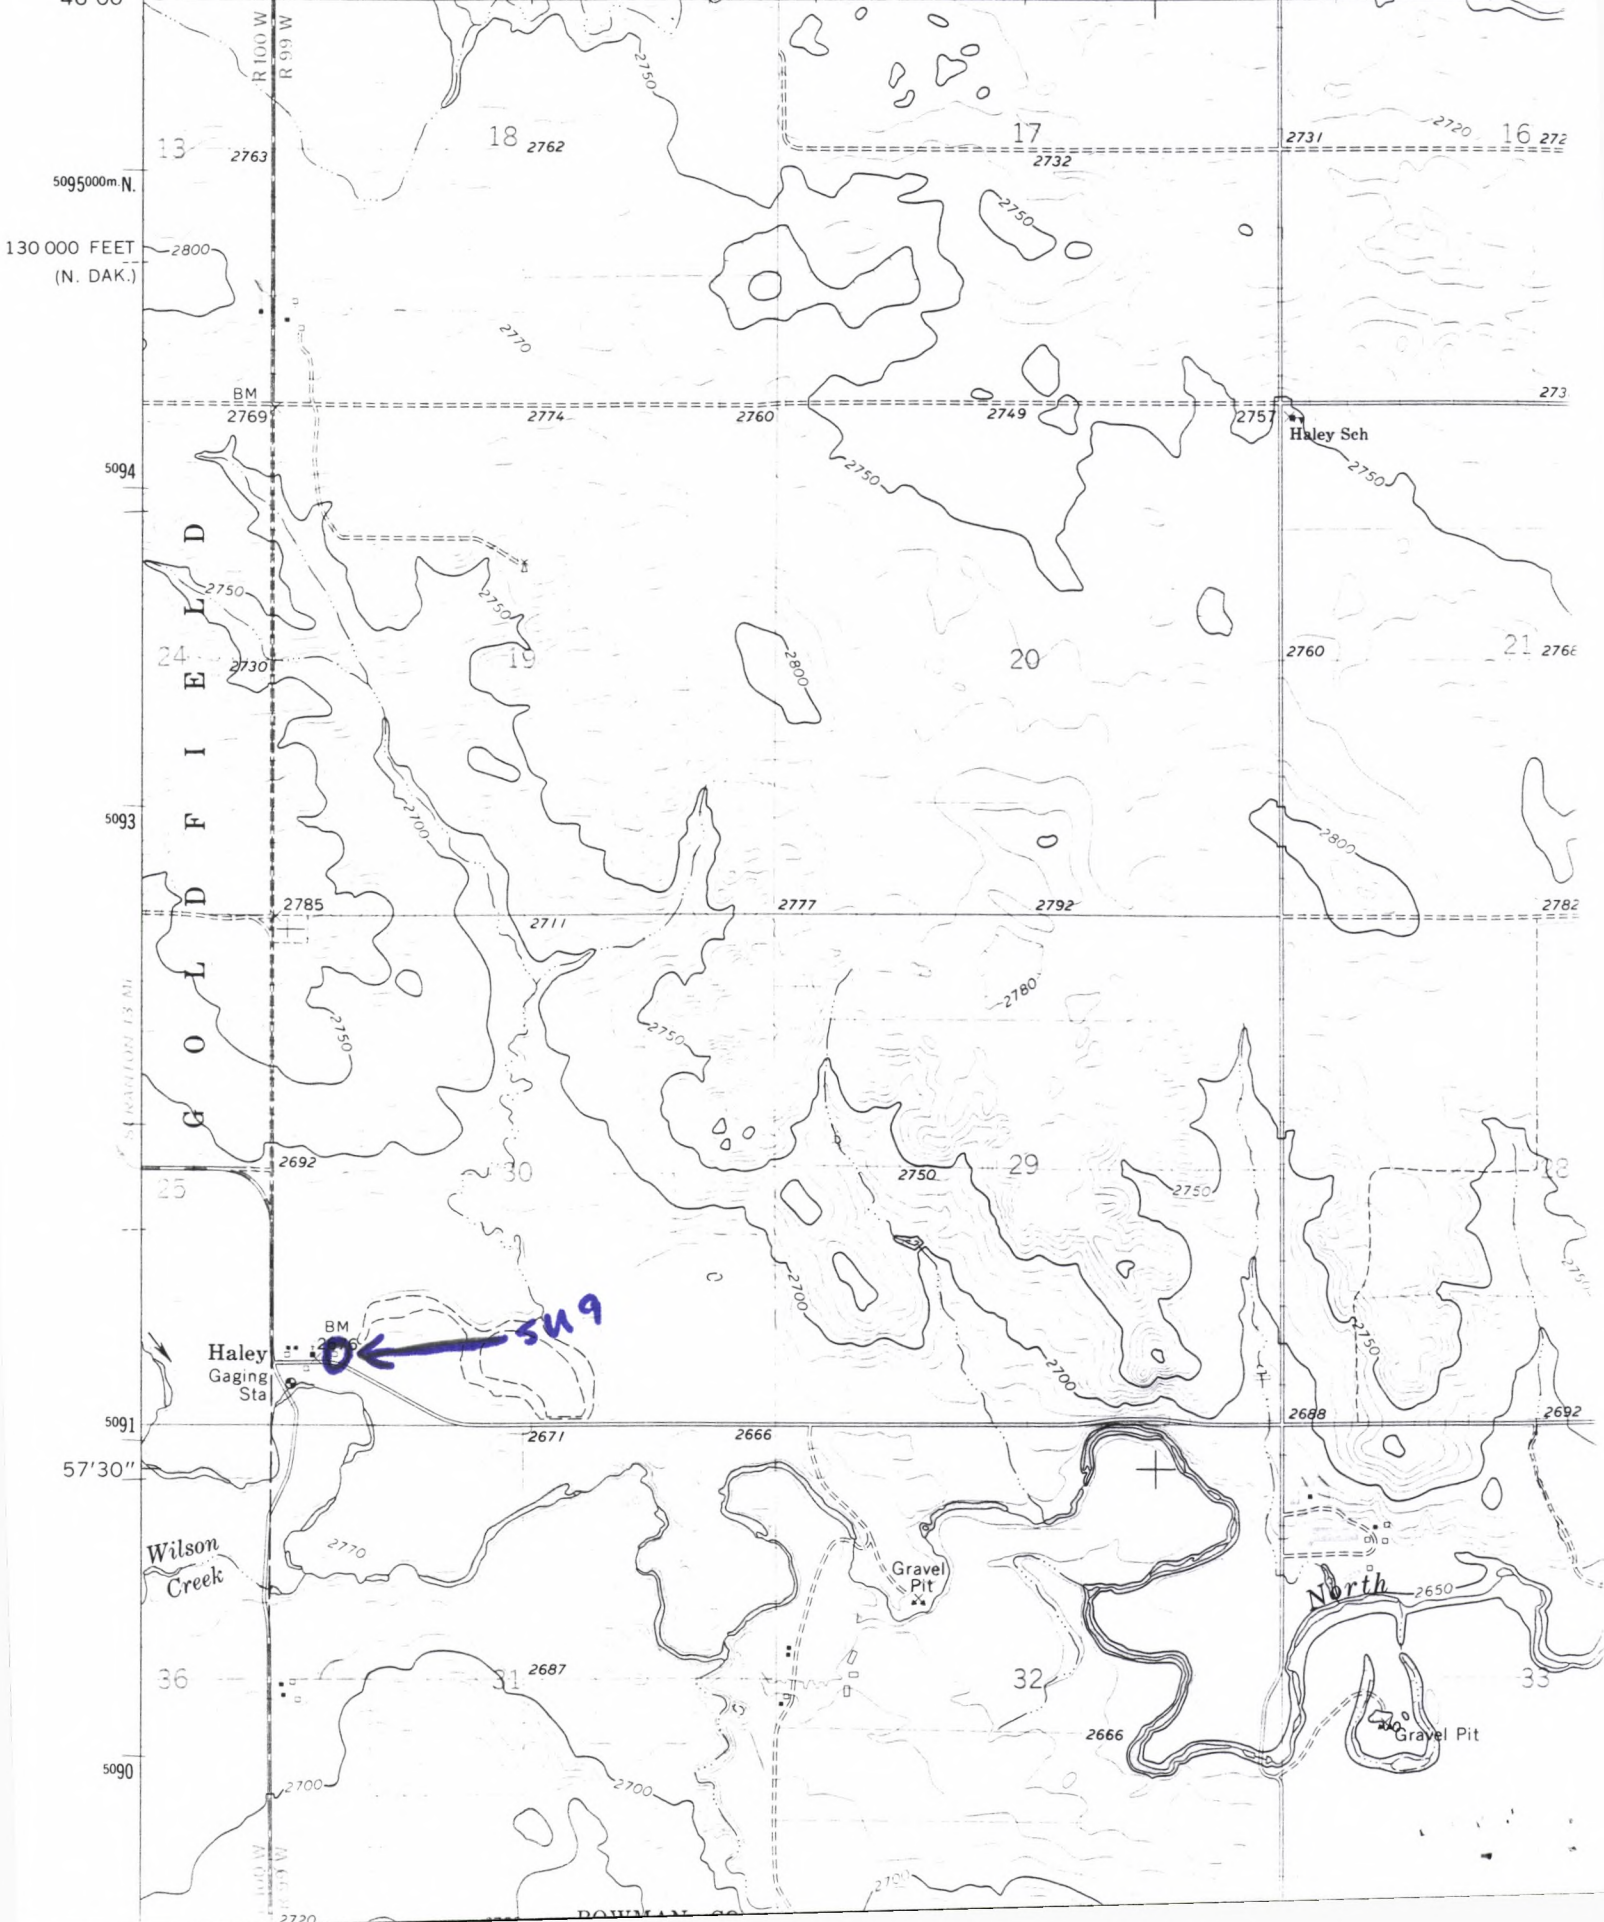

This Haley School is referred to by local people as "the Teacherage," although it was the original school on the townsite. The reason for the usage is that a second and larger school was moved in from the country and stood alongside this one for many years; the original school then was used as quarters for the teacher. The school is on a foundation of uncut stone. It is wood-frame, sided with horizontal wood, and has a gabled roof covered with wood shakes. There is an entryway added to the front, or south, end of the school, which has a slightly vaulted roof covered with asphalt sheeting. On the north end is a shed-roofed addition. The long, double-hung windows, three on the east and three on the west, are in only fair condition, with one partially covered with plywood. The chimney has collapsed.

The strengths of the school as to integrity are setting, feeling, and association, association in particular with the Haley townsite. Otherwise it possesses no particular distinction, but if the townsite merits consideration as a National Register historic district, then the school would be eligible and should be considered for a contributing feature.
