This is a simple, one-room prairie school sitting near Taylor ND as part of buildings at a Heritage Park. The roof has new asphalt shingles with metal ridge cap. A brick chimney can be seen near the southeast end of the east slope of the roof. There is 6 inch lap siding on the building with 4 inch boards on the corners for trim. The entry door and two south facing windows are new. The double hung windows in the main room of the school house look to be original. They have wood trim on the outside and no trim on the inside as someone is in the process of sheetrocking the entire inside of the school. The floor is tongue and groove and appears to be original to the school. Inside the main room of the school, on the south wall nearest the entry door, there are two built in book shelves. In the southwest corner of the school there is a small room with a new door and a closet that is used for storage. It has electricity today, no idea if the school had electricity in the previous location.
